Food Fit for a King

The year 1968 marked the beginning of an era for the King family. Bunt King came home and announced to his wife he had found the perfect location for a steak house. Much discussion of the pros and cons opening a family restaurant filled the home of Bunt and Helen King until the decision to take the chance was finally made. Ye Olde Steak House began when friends and family pulled together to help create the friendly, rustic, down home atmosphere that still exists today.

Over Four decades later, Ye Olde Steak House is still owned and operated by the King Family. Bunt passed away in 1987. His wife, Helen passed away in 2003, now their three children, Nancy, Cheryl and David continue with the family tradition. Even some of the grandchildren help out when possible.

More than forty years, serving the best Iowa grain-fed beef has been customary. Thanks to our wonderful customers, a dream has become reality. We appreciate our customer, both new and old, and hope to serve you "steaks cooked to perfection" for many years to come.

In November 2002, our building sustained damage as a result of fire. We temporarily moved to the L&N railroad station. We reopened this building on September 9, 2004. Thanks to our wonderful customers, we are going strong and business is better than ever.

Recognized as one of the top 100 greatest things about the Tennessee Football.

Recognized as one of the Best Kept Secret of the Smokies.

Atlanta Journal named Ye Olde Steak House, one of three best places to dine after football games.

In 1992, The Montgomery Alabama Journal named Ye Olde Steak House the #1 Restaurant in the Southeastern Conference.

In 1993, Ye Olde Steak House was awarded the Tennessee Beef Backer Award for the restaurant in Tennessee that does the most to promote beef on the menu.

For fourteen consecutive years the Knoxville Metro Pulse has voted Ye Olde Steak House the #1 steak house in Knoxville. From 1995-2008, Ye Olde Steak House won "Best Steak Award" from the Knoxville News Sentinel East Tennessee Reader's Poll.
